Next to that of Rio de Janerio, the pay of Santiago de Cuba is, admittedly the most picturesque in the western emisphere. In reality, the bay forms two harbors, an inner and an outer, both landlocked, and approached by a very contracted and more or less tor nous channel, beset with rocks and hoals. In fact, the entrance to the nter harbor is difficult to locate, and could be almost impossible but for pekept streets and dilapidated dwellings, t, nevertheless, is most attractive when iewed from the water front and at a distance; the yellow and blue houses literarly rise from the water's edge, extending almost to the summit of a hill that, but for a dwarfing effect produced by the hazel blue peaks that encompass both valley and bay, would be termed a mountain. Indeed, the shores of the harbor are almost uniformly high and rugged, being merely the foothills and spurs of the Sierras.

As a military and naval station. Santiago dates from 1514. when Diego Velasquez here founded a settlement and erected rude defenses for its protection. Thus, after Baracoa, Santiago is proposed to the station of the santiago dates from the protection of the future peace of the world. The possession of these islands has now become a millitary necessity; we need them in our business. The flag of the Republic now waves over Cavite, in the harbor of Manila.
