A DAY AT THE WEDDING.

How the Reporter and the Managing Editor Fixed It Up Between Them.

[Detroit Free Press.]

"I say!" said the police reporter, tipping his hat over his eyes and scratching the back of his head, "I don't know whether this is right or not!"

"Don't know whether what is right?" demanded the managing editor.

"This wedding. I went there last night and they gave me a heap of rot about their frocks, but I don't know whether it comes out straight or not. Now here is Mrs. Isaac Belding. I've got her in a panier silk, trimmed a la gros grain, with black point-lace underskirt and box-plaited hair. Does that sound natural?"

"Who sent you to a wedding?" asked the managing editor, contemptuously. "Don't you know that gros grain is a color? That was a gros grain box-plaited dress, trimmed a la black point lace, and her hair was combed en panier. You ought know better than to get things mixed up in that way. Who else did you get? How was the bride dressed?"

"I've got her all right," replied the police reporter. "She wore a white buffant, with a Princess of Thule veil; the underskirt cut a la coquette around the bottom, and trimmed with a basque at the sides."

"That's better," said the managing editor, encouragingly. "That sounds something like it. How was her hair?"

"Her hair was shirred," replied the police reporter. "Shirred at the sides and corsaged on top."

"I don't believe that's right," observed the managing editor. "Read that again."

"It was corsaged at the sides and shirred on top," said the police reporter, referring to his notes.

"Of course," smiled the managing editor. "It makes all the difference in the world. You never saw a woman with her hair corsaged on top in your life. Who else have you got?"

"Here's the bride's mother. She pranced around in an iridescent bead, cut low-necked, and hoisted up on the side with some kind of a plant. I've forgotten the name of it."

"I know that style," said the managing editor, resting his elbows on his desk and his chin on his hands. "It had a big rip down the back, didn't it?"

"That's it, like a V, and tied up with a green shoe-string."

"Of course!" grinned the managing editor. "You can't fool me on frocks. You want to say that it was a—what color did you say the shoe-string was? Green? Then the frock must have been red!"

"No, it was the color of a clam," said the police reporter.

"Oh, yes! Yes, yes! I know. You want to say that it was a gorgeous, deep sea-pearl colored business, trimmed with a gore en pouf, and caught at the side with a delicate floral design, which was especially rich in its artistic effect. Did you get her hair?"

"Her hair was French. I had it somewhere, but I don't find it. It was either French or Spanish, and I have forgotten which."

"You ought to be careful about such things, but we'll call it a la Pyrennees, and she can take her pick as to the side of the mountains she belongs to. Who else was there?"

"Miss Jennie Smith was the bridesmaid. She wore silk socks, with a streak of yellow tapestry up the side. Her hair was bumped."

"How do you mean," demanded the managing editor.

"It was plastered down in front and stuck up behind, like a hen's tail."

"Banged! you mean. How was her dress cut?"

"Well, it was an even stretch from the back of her neck half way up the front stairs. That was one piece. Then she had on a petticoat that showed the whole front, and was trimmed with some cloudy stuff that had dropped down at one end. The back part was the energy, though, and she called it a train, with some kind of a law term in front of it."

"Was it revised statutes?" asked the managing editor.

"No, that wasn't it."

"Did it have anything to do with alimony and the custody of the children?"

"That wasn't it. It was a train with something legal in front of it. I tried to remember, because they have it in the City Hall."

"Couldn't have been anything about contempt of Court, could it?"

"That's it!" exclaimed the police reporter; "a court train, and up around the lower part of the top part of the—of where it hooked on to the body part, you know!"

"The bustle?"

"Yes; she had it tied up with a broad white tape and the darndest big bow-knot you ever saw."

"Certainly; that's all right," said the managing editor. "You want to say that she had a court train looped back with a delicate tape so as to show the contour of the petticoat, which was elaborately finished with loops of linen?"

"I see," replied the police reporter, making a memorandum. "Her cousin was Miss Mears, of Quogue. I only got her hair. It was poached on top with revers, and had a pair of silver tongues stuck through the hind part. Better say anything about that?"

"Certainly. You've got it right. Did they have a big supper?"

"They had boned head cheese and candy and lobster and some shaky stuff. Lots of wine."

"Eh?"

"You bet!"

"Then, just give the caterer's name, and say that on this occasion the table fairly groaned under the weight of his excellent provisions, and even the most fastidious appetites succumbed to the charms of his delicacies. How are you going to wind it up?"

"I say that the guests danced until late, or rather early hour in the morning."

"That's business!" smiled the managing editor. "If you do it all as well as that last part, you've got a magazine article."

Tattooing Confined Criminals.

A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune proposes that confined burglars, highwaymen, thieves and rogues for a first offense should be imprisoned for a short time and tattooed, say, on the forearm. For the second offense of the same kind let him undergo longer imprisonment and be tattooed on the hand. For the third offense longer or life imprisonment and be tattooed on the cheek or the exposed part of the neck. This would be the brand of Cain. Recording these tattoo-marks would facilitate the identification of criminals, as the body-marks cannot be erased except by surgical operation at the expense of a permanent scar. The fear of tattooing would act as a powerful deterrent to those about to commit crimes, and also take away the motive to escape from those who had merited and received the third penalty or open tattoo and were sentenced to long periods of imprisonment.

"AND now," shouts an excited exchange, "where shall we look for independence?" Oh, friend and brother, searching and long-suffering fellow sufferer, look in the kitchen, look in the kitchen.—Hawkeye.
